Teaching Fellow in Medieval History

School of History, Faculty of Arts, Humanities and Cultures

Are you an academic with proven abilities to carry out research-led teaching in medieval history, with a particular focus on the central and later Middle Ages? Do you have the ability to motivate and inspire students? Are you keen to contribute to the world-class Institute for Medieval Studies?

You will carry out teaching in Medieval History, with a particular focus on the history of the Crusades.

You will have a PhD in Medieval History or a cognate discipline (or be close to submission) and relevant teaching experience.

What does the role entail?

As a Teaching Fellow your main duties will include:

- Providing a stimulating, supportive and relevant learning environment through the design and delivery of group teaching, the preparation of high quality learning resources and academically rigorous/challenging lectures, making effective use of technology;
- Teaching on a range of modules, across the undergraduate and MA programmes. These are likely to include HIST1090: Medieval and Renaissance Europe; HIST2030: The Crusades and the Crusader States in the 12th Century; HIST2031: The Crusades and Medieval Christendom; and HIST5870M: Christian Society and the Crusades, 1185-1230.
- The successful candidate may be asked to convene the MA programmes in Medieval History and Medieval Studies, and to supervise undergraduate and master's dissertations, as appropriate;
- Preparing students for assessment tasks, by offering appropriate guidance; grading work once submitted and providing timely, constructive feedback in accordance with and with reference to published marking criteria;
- Facilitating the process of gaining feedback from students and evaluating module teaching in the light of experience, students' achievement and feedback;
- Administration associated with module delivery and maintaining accurate records including student attendance and assessment records.

These duties provide a framework for the role and should not be regarded as a definitive list. Other reasonable duties may be required consistent with the grade of the post.

What will you bring to the role?

As a Teaching Fellow you will have:

- A first or Upper Second Class Honours degree, or equivalent, in History, or a related discipline;
- A Ph.D. in Medieval History, or a cognate discipline, or be very close to submission of a doctoral thesis;
- A strong track record in the field of Medieval History;
- Experience of teaching Medieval History in a University environment, and the ability to interact with students in ways that will enhance the student experience;
- The ability to deliver inspirational research-led teaching on Medieval history, including on the history of the Crusades;
- Good time management and planning skills, with the ability to meet tight deadlines and work effectively under pressure;
- Excellent written and verbal communication skills, including presentation skills and the ability to communicate effectively;
- A proven ability to set priorities in your academic and professional activities, to work effectively without close supervision, and to assume responsibility for teaching and administration;
- The ability to work well both individually and in a team.
- The ability and/or willingness to develop and teach syllabuses that include subjects and historians often underrepresented in the discipline and/or to consider the needs of a diverse student body.

You may also have:

- A relevant teaching qualification and a Higher Education Academy Fellowship.
- Evidence of having actively advanced equalities and inclusion in your place of work.
