Teaching Fellow in Modern British Social History

School of History, Faculty of Arts, Humanities and Cultures

Are you an academic with proven abilities to carry out research-led teaching in Modern British Social History, with a particular focus on the gender, family life and the everyday? Do you have the ability to motivate and inspire students? Are you keen to contribute to research-led teaching in our department?

You will carry out teaching in Modern British Social History, with a particular focus on issues of gender and masculinity, and attitudes and experiences of birth, death and everyday life.

You will have a PhD in Modern British History or a cognate discipline (or be close to submission) and relevant teaching experience.

What does the role entail?

As a Teaching Fellow your main duties will include:

- Providing a stimulating, supportive and relevant learning environment through the design and delivery of group teaching, the preparation of high quality learning resources and academically rigorous/challenging lectures, making effective use of technology;
- Teaching on a range of modules, across the undergraduate and MA programmes. These are likely to include the level 3 Special Subject: HIST3302 Ordinary People: The Everyday Lives of Men, Women and Children in Britain, c. 1920s-50s, the Level 3 option module HIST3732 Men and Masculinity in Britain, c.1860-1960; MA module HIST5851M Death, Dying and the Dead in Twentieth Century Britain; and the team taught Level 2 historiography module HIST2557 Thinking about History;
- Contribute seminars and lectures to team taught modules, as appropriate;
- Supervision of undergraduate and master's dissertations, as appropriate;
- Co-supervision of PGRs working in this field, undertaken in each case alongside an experienced co-supervisor;
- Preparing students for assessment tasks, by offering appropriate guidance; grading work once submitted and providing timely, constructive feedback in accordance with and with reference to published marking criteria;

- Facilitating the process of gaining feedback from students and evaluating module teaching in the light of experience, students' achievement and feedback;
- Administration associated with module delivery and maintaining accurate records including student attendance and assessment records.

These duties provide a framework for the role and should not be regarded as a definitive list. Other reasonable duties may be required consistent with the grade of the post.

What will you bring to the role?

As a Teaching Fellow you will have:

- A Ph.D. in Modern British Social History, or a cognate discipline (or be near to completion meaning the initial version of the thesis has been submitted);
- A strong track record in the field of Modern British Social History;
- Experience of teaching Modern British Social History in a University environment, and the ability to interact with students in ways that will enhance the student experience;
- The ability to deliver inspirational research-led teaching on Modern British Social History, including themes of gender, race, class, family life and the everyday;
- Good time management and planning skills, with the ability to meet tight deadlines and work effectively under pressure;
- Excellent written and verbal communication skills, including presentation skills and the ability to communicate effectively;
- A proven ability to set priorities in your academic and professional activities, to work effectively without close supervision, and to assume responsibility for teaching and administration;
- The ability to work well both individually and in a team.
- The ability and/or willingness to develop and teach syllabuses that includes subjects and historians often underrepresented in the discipline and/or to consider the needs of a diverse student body.

You may also have:

- A relevant teaching qualification and a Higher Education Academy Fellowship.

- Evidence of having actively advanced equalities and inclusion in your place of work.
- Experience of PGR supervision
