Teaching Fellow in International Political History

School of History, Faculty of Arts, Humanities and Cultures

Are you an academic with proven abilities to carry out research-led teaching in International History, with a particular focus on the politics of the Middle East in the late twentieth century? Do you have the ability to motivate and inspire students? Are you keen to contribute to research-led teaching in our department?

You will carry out teaching in modern International Political History, with a particular focus on the Middle East, the 'War on Terror', and global geopolitics since the late Cold War.

You will have a PhD in late 20th Century International History or a cognate discipline (or be close to completion) and relevant teaching experience.

What does the role entail?

As a Teaching Fellow your main duties will include:

- Providing a stimulating, supportive and relevant learning environment through the design and delivery of tutorials and seminars, the preparation of high quality learning resources and academically rigorous/challenging lectures, making effective use of technology;
- Teaching on a range of modules, across the undergraduate and MA programmes. These will include the level 2 option HIST2878 The Arab-Israeli Conflict and HIST2866 Cold War to Age of Terror. You will also deliver the MA modules HIST5865M Insurgency/Counterinsurgency and supervise international history long essays as appropriate.
- Contribute seminars, lectures and tutorials to team taught modules, as appropriate;
- Supervise undergraduate and master's dissertations, as appropriate;
- Preparing students for assessment tasks, by offering appropriate guidance; grading work once submitted and providing timely, constructive feedback in accordance with and with reference to published marking criteria;
- Facilitating the process of gaining feedback from students and evaluating module teaching in the light of experience, students' achievement and feedback;

- Administration associated with module delivery and maintaining accurate records including student attendance and assessment records.

These duties provide a framework for the role and should not be regarded as a definitive list. Other reasonable duties may be required consistent with the grade of the post.

What will you bring to the role?

As a Teaching Fellow you will have:

- A Ph.D. in late 20th Century International History, with a focus on the Middle East and/or the late Cold War and/or the War on Terror, or be near to completion, meaning the initial version of the doctoral thesis has been submitted;
- A strong track record in the field of late 20th Century International and Middle Eastern History;
- Experience of teaching late 20th Century International and Middle Eastern History in a University environment, and the ability to interact with students in ways that will enhance the student experience;
- The ability to deliver inspirational research-led teaching on late 20th Century International History, especially with relation to the Middle East, and global politics since the late Cold War;
- Good time management and planning skills, with the ability to meet tight deadlines and work effectively under pressure, individually or as part of a team;
- Excellent written and verbal communication skills, including presentation skills and the ability to communicate effectively;
- A proven ability to set priorities in your academic and professional activities, to work effectively without close supervision, and to assume responsibility for teaching and administration;
- The ability and/or willingness to develop and teach syllabuses that includes subjects and historians often underrepresented in the discipline and/or to consider the needs of a diverse student body.

You may also have:

- A relevant teaching qualification and a Higher Education Academy Fellowship.
- Evidence of having actively advanced equalities and inclusion in your place of work.
