Research Fellow in Tibetan Studies, School of Languages, Cultures and Societies, Faculty of Arts, Humanities and Cultures

Overview of the Role

Are you a scholar of Tibetan studies with an interest in traditions? Do you have field experience documenting traditional cultural practices in Tibetan communities in China? Would you like to be part of a project that seeks to make significant steps in helping to keep Tibetan traditional cultures alive?

As a research fellow in Tibetan Studies, you will help develop and support the work of the Tibetan Sustainable Heritage Initiative, a UKRI funded project aimed at working collaboratively with Tibetan communities in the People's Republic of China and globally to document traditional cultures and co-create new methods for cultural transmission. In collaboration with the project PI, Dr Timothy Thurston, you will work with tradition bearers to develop and test new methods of cultural transmission, help develop training materials, lead workshops, and write and present about findings in international venues. This exciting project has the potential to make real differences both in Tibetan communities and in international circles interested in questions of cultural sustainability.

You will have some experience conducting fieldwork-based research and a PhD in Tibetan studies or a relevant discipline by time of appointment, ideally with a specialism in vernacular traditions. You will have the ability to conduct fieldwork in Western China. You may also have some experience working with or developing digital tools for Tibetan communities. You will also have opportunities to develop your own research and teaching, as appropriate.

What does the role entail?

As a Research Fellow in Tibetan studies, your main duties will include:

- Working with and supporting Dr Thurston on their research agenda, research projects and publications;
- Contributing to working with Tibetan traditions bearers, cultural documentarians, and educators to co-create strategies for transmitting Tibetan culture;
- Learning how to develop and use digital technologies to support cultural sustainability;
- Being an active researcher, conducting research, planning and undertaking fieldwork/conferences and analysing data, including conducting fieldwork with Tibetan communities;
- Under guidance, writing about research findings for academic and non-academic audiences and communicating complex data in accessible ways;
- Being involved in presenting research findings at both national and international conferences;
- Being involved in developing Chinese and Tibetan language training materials;
- Contributing to teaching parts of training workshops in Western China;
- Assisting in monitoring and evaluating the outcomes of workshops and other training programmes;
- Updating the project website and social media presence;
- Balancing the competing pressures of research demands and deadlines. These duties provide a framework for the role and should not be regarded as a definitive list. Other reasonable duties may be required consistent with the grade of the post.

What will you bring to the role?

As a Research Fellow in Tibetan Studies you will have:

- A PhD in Tibetan studies, or in a related field;
- Competence in at least one dialect of Tibetan;
- Experience conducting ethnographic fieldwork in Tibetan communities;
- The ability to travel to China to conduct fieldwork;
- Experience of presenting research findings to professional and/or academic audiences;
- Excellent organisational skills with a demonstrable ability to manage time effectively, to prioritise tasks and meet internal and external deadlines;
- A high level of interpersonal and communication skills, including ability to communicate effectively with the academic lead researcher and other stakeholders as appropriate;
- Ability to work as part of a team to achieve project outcomes and also independently on own initiative.

You may also have:

- Competence in Standard Mandarin Chinese;
- Some experience working with digital technologies and computer coding to support research outcomes;
- A proven record of research on Tibetan oral and expressive traditions;
- Experience developing monitoring and evaluation practices.
- A desire to work with Tibetan communities to help sustain intangible cultural traditions;
