Lecturer in Quantitative Social Research (Teaching and Research) School of Sociology and Social Policy Faculty of Social Sciences

Do you have an established background in quantitative social research? Do you have a strong and growing research record, a dynamic research agenda and a commitment to securing research funding? Are you committed to creating and delivering an exciting and inclusive student experience?

We invite applications for the post of Lecturer in Quantitative Social Research. With digital and quantitative skills increasingly important to the graduate jobs market, we are looking for someone with expertise in a range of quantitative research methods who will bring innovative teaching that will inspire our students and an exciting quantitative research agenda that will both complement and expand our existing expertise. We particularly welcome applicants whose quantitative expertise engages with emerging or cross-disciplinary fields such as digital sociology, computational social science, epidemiological approaches to social policy and / or the use of artificial intelligence and data science methods in social research. However, applications with research expertise in other substantive areas of sociology or social policy are invited.

The successful applicant will contribute to all aspects of the development and provision of social research teaching and learning in the School, as well as delivering research-led teaching in other areas.

With a doctorate in a relevant area of sociology, social policy or a related discipline, you will have research and teaching experience and a proven record of research funding commensurate with career stage.

What does the role entail?

As a Lecturer in Quantitative Social Research (Teaching and Research) your main duties will include:

- Carrying out the duties of the post in accordance with the University values of collaboration, compassion, inclusivity and integrity, supporting the core value of academic excellence;

- Being involved in the research-based education activities of the School and taking part in other teaching activities, as appropriate, in accordance with the University's workload agreements;
- Leading and contributing to research projects, seeking external and / or internal income in line with School priorities;
- Producing an appropriate quantity of research outputs of international quality;
- Leading or contributing significantly to the development of the planning, design, development and delivery of modules and programmes within the School, including both in-person and digital content;
- Leading or contributing significantly to the development of innovative and inclusive approaches to teaching and learning;
- Contributing to the development of inclusive impact pathways with relevant partners and stakeholders;
- Being involved in the review of modules and programmes and in quality assurance and enhancement, regularly collecting and responding to student feedback;
- Participating in the effective supervision of undergraduate and taught postgraduate students as required;
- Providing effective supervision to doctoral students and helping to support excellent training opportunities for future research leaders;
- Promoting the activities of the School nationally and internationally and taking part in knowledge exchange activities, where appropriate and feasible;
- Contributing to student recruitment and the diversification of cohorts and markets;
- Managing important tasks (as either sustained or one-off projects) which facilitate School, Faculty or University performance or business;
- Building networks with colleagues across the School, Faculty and University with expertise in quantitative social research.

These duties provide a framework for the role and should not be regarded as a definitive list. Other reasonable duties may be required consistent with the grade of the post.

What will you bring to the role?

As a Lecturer in Quantitative Social Research (Teaching and Research), you will have:

- A doctorate in sociology, social policy or related discipline;
- A strong and growing research profile in quantitative social research;
- The ability to work with a range of statistical software packages and analytical approaches in both teaching and research;
- An ambitious vision for quantitative social research in the School of Sociology and Social Policy
- A record of, and plans for, grant capture and research funding commensurate with career stage;
- A publication record commensurate with career stage and of international quality;
- Experience of impact and engagement activities with diverse non-academic audiences and partners;
- The capacity to make a high quality and innovative contribution to learning and teaching across SSP's student offer, including providing effective personal tutoring and guidance to students;
- Experience in developing, delivering and managing modules and / or programmes for undergraduates and / or taught postgraduates, including both in-person and digital content;
- Excellent communication skills across diverse audiences and contexts;
- The ability to create and participate in effective working relationships;
- Demonstrable commitment to contributing to an inclusive and supportive learning and work community that values equity and promotes diversity;
- Hold a PGCAP (or equivalent) or an HEA Fellowship or be willing to complete one of these in the first two years.

You may also have:

- Experience of teaching qualitative research methods;
- Experience of conducting mixed methods and / or interdisciplinary research;
- Experience of academic citizenship (e.g. membership of School, Faculty or University-level committees);
- Experience of academic leadership, including management and administrative processes and structures and / or managing resources and staff;

- Experience of PhD supervision.
